RABIES AND OTHER MALADIES

WHILE the stamping out of rabies is at the present time Nevada's most important duty toward itself, for the protection of its people and their interests, there are other evils that need suppressing and they should be taken up in their order as soon as hydrophobia is effectually dealt with.

One of the prevalent evils in this state is failure to conserve the wealth that is produced here. More merchandise is delivered by parcel post than by the wagons and foot messengers of the merchants, except for the staples, which afford small profit to the dealers. The mail order evil should be eradicated and it can only be done by the local merchants expending in proportion as much for intelligent advertising as do the big department stores on the coast and in the east, which burden the mails with their catalogues and circular letters in the seedtime, and with their packages and parcels during the harvest. This is but one of the many evils that menace Nevada. Others will be discussed by the Bonanza in later issues.

UNLESS THE BARS ARE PUT UP

THERE is no doubt about the dumping business when the war is over. The United States will have the bulk of the ready money of the world and will be the nation with the greatest resources to supply the warring nations with all sorts of equipment. But England and Germany have their industrial equipment practically intact and the possibilities of trade in this country, where money is plentiful, will be decidedly attractive. With peace declared millions now fighting will rush to the industrial establishments, and unless the bars are up their product will be dumped here for quick cash to start things on a near normal basis in the warring countries.

Textiles are going to be a leading feature in the dumping, and it will be a crime to put a duty on wool and not a proportionate advance on cloth.

The new Congress is going to "monkey" with the tariff, and it will make a bad mess worse if the bars are not put up high enough to protect labor and capital alike in competing lines of production.

WARRING OVER PEACE

LOS ANGELES clergymen got considerably riled one day this week discussing peace, says the San Bernardino Sun. Incidentally, Dr. Brougher, one of the leading men of the cloth in the southern metropolis made a remarkably clear and distinct statement with reference to America. "You talk of America being a Christian nation," said he. "It is not a Christian nation, but it is a nation with Christian ideals." And we would be a Christian nation if we lived up to them.

But Dr. Brougher was not ready for a resolution condemning preparedness, which stirred up considerable of a ruction among the brethren. "We have not yet reached that place where the lamb will lie down with the lion. We have not yet reached the time when Los Angeles will abandon her police force. . . . As preachers we ought to hold up the Christian ideals, but we have got to map out certain things for the maintenance of peace. We would always look for peace, but at the same time we should be so protected as a nation to hold our own peace."

Instead of being like China. Incidentally, the resolution against preparedness went onto the table and was left there. Los Angeles seems to have a number of clergymen who belong not only to the church but to the nation militant.

THE VISION OF A WORLD COURT

WITH the law of nations in ruins, it is important that publicists should state plainly why it is in ruins, as Elihu Root did in his masterful address before the Pan-American congress. One reason why international law has been wrecked is that it was a thing of shreds and patches. Another is to be found in the fact that no means has yet been devised to compel nations to observe the same standards of morality as individuals, says the New York World.

Like others who have written and spoken on the subject, Mr. Root suggests an international court, but he does not fail to see that before there can be a court there must be law, and before there can be law there must be legislation in good faith. Before any of these things can come to pass, suspicion and greed must be checked, alliances and ententes based upon fear or aggression must be broken up and there must be a general appreciation of the sacred obligations of treaties.

Europe is a shambles today because its jealousies prevented an honest settlement of the Balkan controversies, because the idea of conquest has never been dispelled from the minds of its governments and because the plighted word of some of them, embraced in the most solemn engagements, has been as false as dicers' oaths. There can be no permanent change in this situation until all parties are brought in sorrow and humiliation to a sincere change of heart.

Evidently this is what Mr. Root contemplates when he advocates a court of nations with power to enforce its decrees. If the war should end in a settlement, with both sides exhausted, conditions would be favorable to the reconstruction of civilization on lines of honor, truth and humanity. A decisive victory by either antagonist might leave things about as they are.

ECONOMIC PREPAREDNESS AGAINST WAR

Horse meat is like muskrat stew—mighty good if you do not know what it is.—Morning Oregonian.

Kaiser offers peace for $3,600,000,000. Just trying to keep Henry Ford from sitting in, probably.—Kanesburgh Illuminator.

"Germans report British offensive," says a headline. The counter to that is that the British report that the Germans put on too much swank, what?—Kanesburgh Illuminator.

LATEST GOSSIP IN THE WORLD OF SPORTS

(By Associated Press.)

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. — That intercollegiate athletic competition makes for a better understanding between the students of the various institutions, and results in an exchange of cordial relations which could not be brought about otherwise, is the claim made by the majority of college adherents.

As further proof of this they point to the recent banquet held at Spokane in honor of the Washington state college football team at which the glee club of the University of Washington, their bitterest football rival, sang for the gridiron heroes. That occasional misunderstandings will arise between colleges is considered inevitable, but the pleasant relations which exist between hundreds of athletic rivals throughout the country as compared to the few cases in which the rivals are the loggerheads, is held as sufficient proof that intercollegiate competition, by and large, is a beneficial factor in undergraduate life.

The recent reappearance of Bob McAllister, the former Olympic club champion and one time aspirant for professional middleweight boxing honors, has convinced his friends that he has a pile of work to do before he can hope to cope with such men as Mike Gibbons and Les Darcy, the much touted Australian pugilist.

McAllister, who has been considering re-entry into the ring, attempted his "come back" in a four round bout, after an absence of about a year from the squared ring. The loss of his old time speed and brilliance was apparent, and he was a distinct disappointment. Ring followers hardly expected to find that his layoff would affect him to the extent that was shown.

There has been a vast amount of speculation as to who will be the coach selected to instruct the football players of the University of California next season. There have been rumors and counter rumors daily, and divers candidates have smiled knowingly but said nothing worth saying when approached in regard to the matter. Among those closest in touch with the situation, it is believed that Graduate Manager Stroud himself does not yet know on whom will fall the ultimate choice, and that he still is considering the relative merits of the applicants for the job. They are said to be numerous and from all parts of the country.

Thus far there appears to be no particular favorite in the running and the opinion prevails that as soon as the choice is made it will be announced immediately. California is said definitely to have made up its mind to have the very best coach available and it would occasion surprise to many who are figuring on some local man to get the place, according to some who are watching developments, if some prominent Atlantic states man was selected, which is hinted at as being a possibility.
